No surprise: Internet explodes over #NetNeutrality ruling

What happened: The DC court of appeals ruled 2-1 on Tuesday that the FCC can't bar broadband providers from favoring some sites with faster speeds and slowing, or even blocking, others.

MIT Technology Review says: "The results could be far-reaching. Consumers may see new offerings such as free content from companies willing to pay carriers extra for delivery; app companies could find themselves charged a fee to ensure that their videos get glitch-free performance; and e-commerce companies could be asked to
